Keeping History Above Water: Annapolis is an international gathering hosted by the City of Annapolis in partnership with the Newport Restoration Foundation. Conference discussions will examine the increasing and varied risks posed by sea level rise to historic coastal communities, their built environments and traditional ways of life.

The target audience for conference attendees includes

- preservation, environmental science and hazard mitigation professionals
- political leaders - local, state, national and international
- international embassies, federal agencies, and distinguished think tanks and non-profits
- Business and property owners from Chesapeake Bay coastal communities
- representatives from coastal or riverine communities with involvement in cultural resource protection, land-use planning, green bank and green bond finance
- business leaders and innovators working to address adaptation and mitigation efforts as they relate to sea level rise and natural hazards.

In addition to 250 conference attendees, the Vendor Fair will be free and open to the public on both days.

Take this opportunity to exhibit your flood mitigation and design products at this one of a kind conference and open to the public vendor fair. The great waterfront location will mean your product will be viewed by all of the more than 250 participants plus the non-conference public.
